

Regarding the proposed national do-not-call list:

We have already implemented a do-not-call list in Indiana that works very well. The people that have signed up for it are very pleased with the results. From what I read about this proposal it may not be as strict as Indiana's and it may supersede Indiana's. I am in favor of a national do-not-call list as long as it allows individual states to make their own more strict; I am not in favor of a national do-not-call list if it would strip down what individual states already have or not allow the individual state to make it more strict. Our system works and we don't want it watered down and made less effective.
